Thursday, September 24th

as we celebrate the renaming of the
Will Rogers Park arboretum!

In July, the Oklahoma City Council approved the renaming of the arboretum at Will Rogers Park in acknowledgement of the widespread impact of the Margaret Annis Boys Trust beautification grants in public parks and lands throughout the community. Between 1991 through 2009, more than $1.5 million has been awarded to neighborhoods, schools, nonprofit organizations and local government entities through Margaret Annis Boys Trust beautification grants. Administered by the Oklahoma City Community Foundation, the grants have helped to improve public lands and raise awareness of the beautification projects within the community.

The Margaret Annis Boys Arboretum at Will Rogers Park

Described as a “plant zoo,” the Margaret Annis Boys Arboretum is a 10-acre showcase for native trees and plants and is considered one of the loveliest arboretums in the state. The first trees were planted in the 1930s by famed horticulturist Henry Walter.
