

Longtime Oklahoma City philanthopists Allen and Jacque Wright (right) stand with Genesis (middle left), a patient at The Children's Center, and Lori Boyd (left), chief operating officer at The Children's Center.

Growing Their Giving

When Allen and Jacque Wright first knew they wanted to be philanthropic, they were young and didn't have a lot to give. They found a way to make a greater impact with their giving by supporting endowment funds at the Oklahoma City Community Foundation. Not only were their gifts perpetuated through investment, but by giving to organizations participating in the Kirkpatrick Family Fund match, their charitable dollars were multiplied.

Today, the Wrights have given more than $60,000 to support the endowment funds of a number of area nonprofits, including The Children's Center.

"Whether it's animals, children, young boys or young men – our philanthropy is fueled by our desire to make a difference for them and our community," said Allen.

OKLAHOMA CITY COMMUNITY FOUNDATION
Your Connection for Good